

Letter of Recommendation for Ryan Cox

From: Polly Greist, Instructor of Humanities and Writing
Rogue Community College
Medford, OR

Ryan Cox is a cutting edge, divinely inspired musician; a superb writer; an enchanted genius; and finally, an exceptional human being. It is my great honor to recommend him for a position with Emerald Ink. More than simply recommend, I would take that extra step and suggest you snap him up before someone else does—he is that much of a talent. He would be a valuable asset to any company or enterprise; Ryan has so many talents that he could assume any position and be brilliant at it.

In my over 35 years as a college-level professor of writing and humanities – in multiple college and universities on the West Coast – I have seen it all among the college students I have worked with. Hands down, Ryan is in my top tier of memorable students, both for his talent with language and – perhaps more importantly – his depth and compassion as a human being.

His thinking powers and abilities in problem solving are remarkable. He has an engineer's skills but with a creative twist that leads to concrete and ethereal pieces of work. He is a thinker, an artist, a man of vision. He has a resilience and imagination that take him beyond the limits of your average person.

More importantly, he is a fully developed human being, with understanding and compassion for others. In all class time, he was alert and respectful, followed closely and cleverly to all that was going on, and especially noteworthy, he was a mentor and supporter of his classmates, helping them to whatever extent he could.

Beyond all this, he has a wicked sense of humor, is tuned in to all the dynamics – open and subtle – going on in the class community: Meaning, he is that one student I knew I could count on to react immediately and appropriately if any kind of emergency might happen inside or outside the classroom.

Thus, you will be well rewarded for hiring Ryan. He will not disappoint, and would be an eager, productive and extremely fun associate.
