About

Food has always been a passion of mine, which led to me earning a culinary degree from Columbus State. I learned a lot of valuable information about how to run a kitchen, and my love for carefully crafted food grew exponentially.

During college I worked in the marketing department of my school as a student employee. There I learned all about social media, content creation, planning, and strategy.

Being so involved with social media gave me an increased desire to learn more about photography. I was beyond excited when I realized that I could combine my knowledge of food, social media, and photography and build a career out of it!

After graduation I decided to build my own company where I help food businesses with their social media and marketing. I offer a range of services from food photography to all-inclusive social media management!

I enjoy working with great brands to help them build their audience and generate organic engagement, translating into increased sales.
